THE SPHERE OF WOMAN.

They talk about a woman's sphere as though it had a limit;
There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whispered yes or no,
There's not a life, or death, or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth—
Without a woman in it.

THE GERMAN IN AUSTRALIA.

It is always interesting, and sometimes instructive, to hear the opinions of strangers on our institutions and customs, and when they are expressed in such guarded and temperate terms as Dr. Schutt uses in dealing with medical life in Australia they make really interesting reading. Dr. Schutt has practised for many years in Melbourne, and in a recent number of the "Munchner Medizinische Wochenschrift" he gives his impressions of medical life in that part of the Empire for the benefit of his German colleagues who may be wishful to emigrate to Australia, there to seek their fortunes. According to him, it is easy for the practitioner to make, if not a fortune, then at least an appreciable competence, but he adds a warning to the effect that this El Dorado, where a visit is paid for at the rate of a guinea and a simple surgical operation brings in 200 marks, is an expensive land to live in. He rightly has a dig at the absurd "reciprocity regulations" which forbid a practitioner who possesses a German M.D. from practising in a country where the man with a qualification from a local university is allowed his license, and details a few of the complications which have resulted from such a ruling. The picture he draws of the social conditions is not an attractive one, and we can only hope that it is very much overcoloured. According to him, Australia has civilisation, but comparatively no culture. Australian colleagues are friendly and fraternal in the extreme, but the German doctor is nevertheless "feared and hated." We can only regret that Dr. Schutt has not found his dinner parties more attractive than they appear to have been, and we leave it to our Australian contemporary to press home the inevitable tu quoque which his remarks on local social conditions call forth. For all that we shall look forward with interest to what he has to say on the subject of medical education in the Australian Commonwealth, and if the future article he promises on this subject is as interesting as his first letter it ought to be instructive reading.—"The Hospital."

RED-HAIRED SCOTS DECLINING.

Of much more interest than would appear on the face of it is the volume on the pigmentation survey of school children in Scotland by Mr. J. F. Tocher. It is the first extensive survey of its kind in the United Kingdom, and shows that, taken as a whole, Scotland has only 25 to 27 per cent. fair-haired children as against Prussia and Sweden, with 72 per cent. In eye-colour Scotland is nearer to Prussia. Glasgow is markedly dark, and it is possible that this is due to excess of Highland, Irish, and foreign elements. But there is also the question of the greater fertility and power of survival of the dark element under city environment. In all the densely-populated regions the fair element is lower, and in many cases it cannot be accounted for by immigrants.

HOW BIRDS SHOW OFF IN AUTUMN.

Among birds the cheap plenty of the waning year breeds noisy rivalry. Watch the flocks of rooks that soar aloft now from the fat stubbles of harvest or the pastures where insects and worms abound. First one and then another, then a dozen, and then half the flock will suddenly descend from aloft with such curves and sweeps of fancy flight, and such queer guttural croaks and squeaking grunts, that you cannot resist the conclusion that they are showing off their prowess and their skill in flight and song. When, too, the gulls have assembled in the coastwise fields to follow the autumn plough for worms, you see the same clamorous competition in aerial agility; and, though it might seem mere sport to us, when we shall have completed the conquest of the air, thus to swoop and dive and soar again, yet with the gulls and rooks it is—like the war-dance of savages—a rehearsal of the actions by which enemies are met and vanquished. When next spring a rookery or gullery is invaded by bird of prey or pirate seabird, it is by just such aerial antics that the occupants so harass and terrify the trespasser that he gladly removes himself into the next parish. And then, no doubt, the sitting hen-birds are justified in the choice which they made among the competing athletes of autumn.

The same keynote of rivalry is audible in the jerky September songs of the robins, the renewed spluttering of the starlings on the gable, the sotto voce recitations of the song thrush in the shrubberies, and the hedge sparrow's thin trill. Migrant birds from distant lands may pass in silence, or use only the call-notes to keep their ranks together. Flocks of homeless feathered wanderers may gather in the fields, where they will lead hard gipsy lives until spring comes again. But our own resident birds of garden and orchard have homes of their own to fight for, if necessary; and now is the time when they must learn to proclaim their rights of ownership.—E. Kay Robinson in "T. P.'s Weekly."

There were nearly 700 fewer hansoms in London last year than the year before, over 400 fewer horse 'buses, and 500 fewer horse trams.

PAGEANT HUMOURS.

At the Toynbee annual conversazione a few days ago Mr. Louis N. Parker gave an entertaining description of how a pageant was organised. He described how the identical spot on which a historical incident had taken place was selected for the presentation of the scene, with the utterance of the actual words spoken on the original occasion. Everything was repeated as closely as they could get it, and the children of Warwick who took part in the recent pageant were confident they had been spoken to and kissed by Queen Elizabeth herself. The pageant crowd of 2,000 was an astonishing thing. The stage wasn't in it. The people themselves were doing the historic thing. If they could only hear the shout of delight when the Danes stuck arrows into St. Edmund! It was supposed the Englishman didn't like dressing up. There was nothing else he liked more. Seventy clergy took part in the Bury St. Edmunds pageant, and the difficulty was to prevent their behaving like schoolboys. When they wanted to represent King John they got the most villainous-looking man in the town, but they did not tell him so.

Mr. John Kerr, presiding at the meeting of Dick, Kerr and Co., recently, said he could not see much likelihood of the severe competition in the electrical industry becoming less keen in this country. They were therefore devoting most of their energies to developing Colonial and foreign business, and a very large proportion of the machinery now manufactured in their Preston works was for abroad.

As an instance of how they were obtaining a foothold in new markets abroad, he mentioned that they had taken a rather important contract for tramway-car equipment for the city of Moscow, and this in face of very keen competition from Continental makers. In South America and Japan particularly their business connection had been increasing rapidly.

IRISHWOMAN'S DEATH AT 113.

The death is reported from Newtownbutler, co. Fermanagh, of Mrs. Catherine Kierans, claimed to be Ireland's oldest inhabitant. Mrs. Kierans, claimed to be Ireland's oldest inhabitant. Mrs. Kierans had attained the remarkable age of 113 years, 80 of which she spent on a lonely island in Lough Erne. She had clear recollections of incidents following the rebellion of 1798, and used to tell of a tragic affray in 1829 between Protestants and Roman Catholics, traditionally remembered as "Macken Fight." A cousin of hers, Connor Macmanus, was hanged in connection with the fight.

A SNUBBED SOVEREIGN.

"Some years ago," says "Cassell's Saturday Journal," "King Leopold was motoring in Holland when his car came to a dead stop, and the best efforts of the chauffeur failed to move it. A policeman came on the scene, and the chauffeur asked him to fetch a horse. The man in blue refused. 'But it is for the King of the Belgians,' urged the chauffeur. 'What, that the king! I've heard that story before, my boy, and I'm not taking any.' And with a contemptuous glance at the stranded monarch, the policeman stalked away."

BERKELEY CASTLE.

"Incomparable Berkeley!" exclaims "The Bystander." "There is nothing to equal it in historic interest and romance. Everything speaks of a bygone age. Untouched and unspoiled, it has stood as it is to-day for nearly one thousand years. Its immense walls, its narrow passages, its noble banqueting hall, its chapel, are just as they have been for centuries. From the days of Earl Godwin, in 1043, the family have lived here, and never during these long years has the Castle been uninhabited. In King Edward II.'s day Berkeley is described in Domesday Book as being a royal demesne, and it was here that this ill-fated monarch met his end. It was on Robert Fitz-Hardinge, the son of an eminent Saxon Thane, and Master of the Horse to William the Conqueror, that the Manor of Berkeley was bestowed. Since then there has been scarcely any transactions in civil or military annals in which the family have not played a prominent part. The present owner descends from Colonel Berkeley, a son of the fifth Earl of Berkeley, who was made, in 1807, Earl Fitz-Hardinge. The Earldom died with him, his brother, Sir Maurice—a sailor—who succeeded to Berkeley, being created Baron Fitz-Hardinge—or Fitzhardinge, the spelling the present Baron prefers. He was father of the third and last of the Barons.

"From end to end the Castle teems with historic objects, works of art, treasures of priceless value, and ancient arms. Once a mighty fortress, it is now purely a Gloucestershire home of sport—the home, too, of a kindly-hearted English gentleman, simple in his ideas and ways of life, devoted to sport, to animals, and to doing good by stealth."

THE HORSE TO THE RESCUE.

A BOURTON INCIDENT.

—On Tuesday, Oct. 13, Mr. Shilson, of Charlbury, with his car, tried to cross the Windrush near the Police-station, but found the water deeper than he expected, and got stranded in mid-stream. Luckily a horse belonging to Mr. Henry Humfries, with his son William in charge, was coming down the street at the time. The driver waded the horse in, fastened the traces to the car, and brought it safely to land.

He and his second wife have had thirteen children, nine of whom are alive. Three of their sons were killed in one year—one in South Africa with the Gloucesters, one on the G.W.R. at Gloucester, and one on a traction engine at Notgrove. Mr. Powell is in his 90th year and Mrs. Powell is 73.

Curious Memorial Vault in Old Cemetery, Cheltenham,

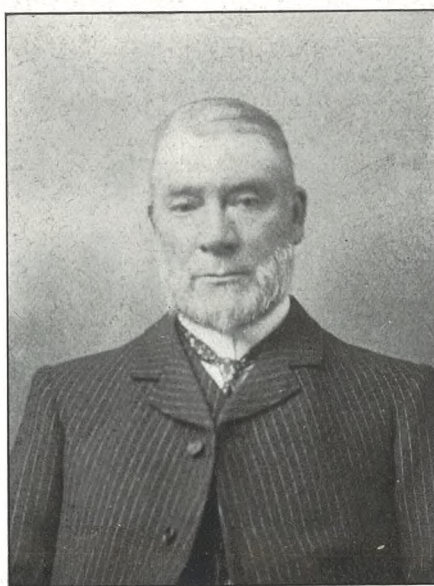

Although probably built as a burial vault, the inside being arranged with slate slabs for coffins, it is quite empty except for gardeners' tools. Rumour credits the vault as being built for the Perry family, members of whom are buried in a grave near by. On looking up the files of the "Cheltenham Chronicle" we find the following paragraph in the issue dated Tuesday, October 15th, 1861:—"A monster vault is being erected in the Cemetery by Mr. Darby, the cost of which, we hear, will be nearly £1,000. It will be nearly 12 feet in depth, and over it will be erected a large room, having a window towards Bayshill and a large doorway facing High-street. The walls are about nine feet high, and are of carved stone, and the figure of a dog cut in stone will be placed over the building. The cost of the carving alone has been upwards of £100, and the vault when completed will no doubt form one of the most striking objects in the Cemetery."

INTERIOR OF THE KING'S HALL, NORTH-STRET, CHELTENHAM, which has just been opened as a public hall, supplying a much-needed want in the town. No expense seems to have been spared in making it up to date, including a new dancing floor laid on springs. There is also a smaller hall, and numerous rooms en suite. It is now available for meetings, dances, and private parties.

SUCCESSFUL STROUD BADGEP HUNTERS.

Neale, F. White, C. T. Turner, and W. Ashmead. Sitting:—W. Virgo (with "Jack"), George Matthews (with "Nettle" and "Scamp"), T. King (with "Pincher").

Remains of what appears to be a submerged primeval forest of oak have been found during excavations for harbour extensions at Blyth. One investigator has also found no fewer than fifteen fine pairs of antlers.

HOW TO BECOME A TEACHER.

The Board of Education has issued a pamphlet intended to supply information which will be of use to young persons who wish eventually to become teachers in public elementary schools, and who desire information as to the necessary qualifications for doing so, and to persons anxious of obtaining posts on the teaching staffs of public elementary schools who wish to know in what capacity, if any, they are qualified for recognition as teachers under the regulations of the Board of Education. The pamphlet will at the same time be of use to teachers already serving in such schools who wish to know how they can improve their qualifications and raise their status under those regulations. The Board of Education has made every endeavour to furnish complete particulars as to the conditions of recognition of teachers in all capacities, and to supply information on all the points which teachers, or intending teachers, most often raise in letters which they address to the Board.
