THIRST, NATURAL AND ARTIFICIAL.

In contra-distinction to the true, physiological thirst, there exists nowadays what we may term a spurious thirst, or the sensation of thirst without the actual need on the part of the body for moisture. This thirst practically depends entirely upon dryness of the pharynx, the palate, the naso-pharynx, and adjoining parts, and is in many cases due to a deficiency in quantity or quality of the saliva. This phenomenon often depends upon the vagaries of modern diet and habits, chief amongst which may be mentioned, first and foremost, cigarette smoking, the taste for highly-spiced food, and last, but not least, the taste for mineral waters, and especially those super-saturated artificially with carbonic acid gas. The products of the combustion of paper, the spices and salted almonds, the bubbles of carbonic acid gas evolved from mineral waters, in their course down the swallowing tract all tickle for the moment our palates, and we like them; but just as surely as dropping water wears away the stone, so do these constant irritants destroy the secreting glands of those parts exposed to them and produce the dry-throated, husky or nasal-voiced, and spuriously thirsty individual. Breathing through the mouth instead of through the nose by causing a constant current of drying air through parts which should be devoted to taste tends still further to make the mouth and throat dry and increase thirst.—"The Hospital."

THE PIANO'S RIVAL.

The dulcitone, the latest musical instrument,
has the keyboard of a piano, but the key-hammers produce sound by striking steel forks instead of wire. A semi-circular steel spring carries the vibrations from each fork to the sounding board.
The tone is softer than that of the piano, but it has great clearness and carrying power, and is adapted for solo-playing as well as for accompanying other instruments or the voice. Importtant advantages are the lack of necessity of tuning and the portability, for a dulcitone of five octaves weighs but 45 pounds.

CLOTHES OF PAPER.

Paper clothes are said to be one of the possibilities of the near future. It is a German invention, and has been successfully used to take the place of cloth in many directions. Composed of wood fibre, it is spun into a material which, although essentially paper, has a soft surface and is not readily crushed or dented. When bleached it is of a snowy whiteness, and at first glance is not to be distinguished from cotton. It forms excellent rugs and carpets, and as wearing apparel has the advantage of being warmer than cloth, is more easily dyed, cheaper, and lighter.
