THE AUGUST RUSH.

WHEN A HOLIDAY IS NOT A HOLIDAY.

It is easy enough to account for the absurd position that most people's holidays are packed into the same period of opportunity (which is generally the month of August or thereabouts), but it is not so easy to see why such a silly arrangement is allowed to continue. The time arrangements of the schools, we are told, must be endured. What is called the season at seaside and other places is compressed into a month or six weeks, and the inconvenience of this limited time must seriously appeal to everybody. Accommodation is expensive, hard to get, and crowded, the railway companies are at their wits' ends to cope with the sudden demand upon them, and altogether the discomforts and inconveniences are so great consequent upon everybody going away at the same time that not a few have given up the idea of a holiday in absolute despair. The whole thing is a worry from beginning to end, and it is doubtful whether under these manifest disadvantages a holiday is a holiday in its proper sense at all. It is pitiful to see the inconvenience and cruelties which families have to put up with because they are all forced to go away at the same time. It is also absurd that the proprietors of hotels, apartments, and so forth are not able to enjoy a longer patronage than that which some two months afford; and, in short, it would be to the general advantage of all concerned if the holiday were not made such an intensely concentrated occasion. And all this submission to an irksome, wearisome time, which, on the contrary, should be as pleasant and enjoyable as possible in the interests of the health of both parents and children, is due to the arbitrary ruling of the school authorities. Surely there needs to be a revision of our methods of taking holiday, and the remedy cannot be far to seek or an impracticable one. At the risk of curtailing the school holidays at Easter and at Christmas, it seems feasible to suggest a straightforward three months' holiday in the summer, a period which gives some room in which to choose a time for going away, with all the unquestionable advantages that such a latitude would allow. The English summer, which is not always the compost of rain, wind, gloom, and cold which we are enduring this year, is not concentrated in August; it spreads over what can be the glorious months of June, July, and September, and earlier months have the advantage of giving a maximum of the sun's health-giving rays.—"The Lancet."

Lincoln City Council on Tuesday accepted an offer by Mr. Andrew Carnegie of £10,000 for the provision of a public library.

PAINTED FLIES.

At a meeting of Blofield Guardians on Tuesday, Major Cubitt, the chairman, said that the plague of flies at Postwick, Norfolk, still continued. Dr. Back said he had recently visited Postwick with Mr. Howlett, the entomologist, and in order to see if the flies came from the marsh several hundreds were captured there, coloured, and then liberated. Unfortunately, the experiments were spoilt by a heavy storm of rain (laughter). However, they had decided to try again, when they hoped the weather would be more favourable.
